ONCE A FIGHTER

by Stan Carter

His head ached like the wings of an airplane. This was the first time he ever had had any kind of pain in his head all the way up the back. There was a dark stain on his forehead for the first time in years. The air had to be so clean on that night because his head had never hurt like this before. The sun was too bright for it. The world was a bright sun.

He knew he had done a lot of fighting. He could feel the yip-yip in his head. It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before. It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before. It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before.

It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before. It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before. It was a yip-yip sound that he had never heard before.

The man in the red hat had looked at him. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

The man in the red hat had looked at him. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

in the face. His eyes were like glass.

There was a sound like a gun. The man in the red hat had looked at him. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat.

And suddenly I found that there was a sound like a gun. The man in the red hat had looked at him. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat.

The man in the red hat had looked at him. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat. He was a man in the red hat.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

The light was different. It was a different light. It was a different light. It was a different light. It was a different light.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

That was the first time he had had a headache. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before. He had never had a headache before.

"You mean you're going to be a doctor?"

"Yes, I am. I've decided to study medicine. I want to help people who are sick and in pain."

"That's a noble goal, but it's a long and difficult path."

"I know, but I'm determined. I've read about the work of doctors and I'm inspired by their dedication."

"I'm sure you will. But remember, it's not just about the work, it's about the people you'll be helping."

"I understand. I want to make a difference in people's lives."
